Not only does Currawong Lakes have large wingshooting areas, but also a top-class sporting clays range for your use.

Beretta Australia and Currawong Lakes have combined to showcase the world-renowned firearms of Beretta with Tasmania's exceptional and professionally managed wingshooting destination, Currawong Lakes.

This partnership between one of the country's leading firearms importer-wholesaler and the Tasmania-based retreat and game reserve well demonstrates the synergy that exists between those involved in the shooting sports. A range of Beretta firearms, including 12- and 20-gauge over-and-under and side-by-side shotguns, will be made available free of charge to clients at Currawong Lakes, allowing them to experience these quality firearms in a beautiful setting on the most challenging of gamebird hunting and sporting clays shooting.

Beretta general manager Greg Chan said the partnership made perfect sense for both organisations, as they shared very similar philosophies towards hunting and firearms.

"Currawong Lakes is better than anything I've seen in this country; their operation is first-class and we have very similar philosophies," Greg said. "What we're trying to do is look at ways in which the hunting and shooting experience can be managed in a professional and organised manner."

Currawong Lakes director John Bonnor said the alliance gave further recognition to his operation as Australia's leading wingshooting destination, sharing Beretta's vision for quality wingshooting and sporting clays.

Currawong Lakes boasts one of the most extensive sporting clays ranges in Australia, with simulated quail shooting, as well as driven quail and grouse shooting, all in a world-class layout.

"Currawong Lakes is the only traditionally managed and wild-bird shooting reserve in Australia," said John. "Our game-keeping staff's careful management of the environment and release program for our birds benefits the environment, as well as ensuring that our birds provide the most challenging and sporting opportunities for our clients."
